

THE BEST DATA
SCIENCE NEWSLETTERS
TO KEEP YOURSELF
UP-TO-DATE

What better way to stay up-to-date in 2018 than to have the latest hotness delivered to your inbox? We read a lot of newsletters (a LOT), so we've done the legwork for you and narrowed it down to the top 10 that will keep you in-the-know next year.

1

A fun email with the top data stories of the week - including best practices by tech leaders, cool DS projects, long reads, data viz projects, & a weekly video.

Four Short Links

BY O'REILLY®

Not only data science - but always a very smart collection of what's been going on in the tech world, with an interesting blurb about each of them.

3

Data Science Weekly

Just the right amount of articles to get a fair idea of what's been going around in the past week - includes job postings, training resources, and even a book review.

4

Super cute logo and good selection of links, with a note from the editor on each of them; we particularly like the interviews of data thought leaders they sometimes have.

5

FAIR WARNING
BY SOPHIE WARNES

Sophie is clearly a cool person judging by how cool her newsletter is - with a focus on the UK (which is unusual) as well as the US.

6

AI Weekly

Not always the most recent articles, but always a good bunch of great articles that other newsletters may have missed - includes resources as well.

7

A personal data newsletter is always more fun, so you know what's special about each article, and why each of them was selected.

8

EMERGENT
FUTURE //

A straightforward newsletter curated by Algorithmia - with a top 3 trends of the week, a bunch of articles, and resources. Straightforward!

9

The Wild Week in AI

Minimal design, but a pretty large selection of articles organised by theme - news, code projects, and research papers.

10

Data Elixir

A great selection of the best articles for the most part, even though a bit more uneven than other newsletters in here.
